This Edition contains everything that you need to build and operate your own dream railroad. The parent-partner relationship in families with an autistic child is often negatively affected. By comparison with mothers of typical children, the mothers of autistic children are typically more neglectful, whereas the fathers of autistic children are typically more overprotective. Parents of children with Asperger's syndrome also show disturbed parent-child relationships. Previous research has shown that these families display characteristics more similar to those of families with autistic children than to those of families with neurotypical children. This study was designed to compare the parents and partners of children with autistic spectrum disorders and those of children with Asperger's syndrome. The parent-partner relationship of both autistic spectrum disorder and Asperger's syndrome families deviates from that of neurotypical families, and no differences were found between autistic spectrum disorder and Asperger's syndrome families. Findings for mothers and fathers are discussed. Joe, I am traveling this week, but I'll be checking my voicemail. The problem is that the cost of an ongoing assumption payment is not there -- it's an on-going payment. I would check to see if this is the case. Otherwise, it sounds like maybe we are OK in terms of the termination payment. On a totally different note, Susan, when you get a chance, please follow up on the comment you received from Dan Hyvl on the credit docs for Sithe's financing. Thanks.
