Spend less time on which decal or vinyl to use and more time on makingQ: ActiveMQ - access broker using HTTP I have been looking for the last few hours on how to configure ActiveMQ (or Apache Qpid) to be accessible through a HTTP endpoint. The end goal is to be able to use Mule to consume messages published from ActiveMQ. (I'm using Mule 4) I have heard about a number of ways to get this done, so I am unsure as to which one is the most efficient. For the moment, I will focus on how to make ActiveMQ accessible through HTTP. I already have a pipeline that publish messages to ActiveMQ, and one that consume messages from ActiveMQ. I have confirmed that ActiveMQ is available through a port where Mule can reach. Using ActiveMQ Artemis, I got the following to work using a Web Portal, and was able to confirm that the connection was established ActiveMQ Artemis - Web Portal I've been looking at the ActiveMQ configuration (page on the website). Unfortunately, their example does not show you how to configure ActiveMQ as an HTTP listener. ActiveMQ - Configuration - Web Portal The ActiveMQ Apache Qpid group has an article that shows how to configure ActiveMQ to be available through port 9091 (<http://f678ea9f9e>
